Section 18 of Madras Act IV of 1896.

Provided that in case of impartible tarwads the guardianship shall not extend to the interest possessed by the wife or children in their tarwad property.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The object of this Bill is to define and regulate the law of marriage and inheritance among the Marumakkattayam and Aliyasantana Hindus in Malabar and South Canara. In 1896 Madras Act IV of 1896 was passed whereby marriages among Marumakkattayam people was recognized as valid but that act prescribed a form of registration foreign to the instincts of the people as necessary for the recognition of marriages and the Act has on that account been almost a dead letter. In this Bill those offending provisions as to registration have been omitted and all customary marriage unions are declared valid in the eye of the law. It being impossible to repeal the sections as to registration alone and leave the other portions of the Act intact provision has been made for the repeal of the said Act while most of its sections are reproduced.-

Clause 2 deals with definitions and they are for the most part reproductions from Act IV of 1896.

Clause 3 deals with how marriages are contracted and between whom. The clause is based on Act IV of 1896 except where the present clause seeks to make unions between a male having a personal law of marriage with a Marumakkattayam female valid. But in this case care has been taken as will be seen from clause 11 to secure to the family of such persons rights that they now possess.

Clause 4 deals with dissolution of marriages and any unsavoury trials in a Divorce Court have been avoided The clause is adapted from the Travancore Nayar Regulation

Clauses 5, 6, 7 and 8 deal with the procedure to be adopted where dissolution through a court of law is prayed for.

Clause 9 is a reproduction with slight alterations of section 15 of Act IV of 1896 and prescribes when marriages are null and void.

Clause 10 provides for the maintenance of the divorced wife and follows section 22 of Act IV of 1896 with slight verbal alterations.

Clause 11 provides for the wife and children inheriting the property of the husband and vice versâ An exception has been added to this clause to meet the wishes of the Nambudries and other Brahmans who form alliances with Marumakkattayam women and provides that their family properties shall not be claimable by the issue of such marriages. Sections 23 and 24 of Act IV of 1896 provided that one-half of the property should be inherited by the wife and children and vice versâ, while clause 11 of the Bill provides that the whole shall be so inherited. There is no reason why after the recognition of marriages as valid the self-acquisitions of Marumakkattayam Hindus should not go to their wives and children Among the Marumakkattayam Tiyyas marriages have been all along recognized as valid and their self-acquisitions usually go to the wife and children. The same is the case among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas—vide Moore's Malabar Law, pp. 325 and 326.

Clause 12 deals with the devolution of such property. Act IV of 1896 (sections 23 and 24) does not provide for its subsequent devolution and the High Court decisions are not uniform on the question of devolution of or the incidents of property acquired by gifts from fathers or karnavans. The provisions of the Indian Succession Act are the most equitable in that women there are not subject to any disabilities as to holding and possession of property as they are under the Hindu law.

Clause 13 deals with the question of maintenance and follows in the main the provisions of section 17 of Act IV of 1896.

Clause 14 deals about guardianship and here also Act IV of 1896 has been followed, the clause being only an adaptation of section 18 of the said Act.

VIII of 1

Provided that in case of impartible tarwads the guardianship shall not extend to the interest possessed by the wife or children in their tarwad property.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The object of this Bill is to provide for the better management of the tarwad (family) properties belonging to Marumakkattayam and Aliyasantana Hindus in Malabar and South Canara and to provide for partition among them where necessary.

Clause 2 deals with the definitions of terms that have to be understood in administering this law and is, so far as it goes, based on Madras Act IV of 1896.

Clause 3 deals with the question of impartibility and aims at making impartible those tarwads, two-thirds of whose members are for impartibility.

Clauses 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 deal with the processes whereby this intention is declared or modified.

Clauses 3 to 10 practically act as a referendum and make it possible for the Marumakkattayam people to express an opinion as to whether they desire partibility or impartibility.

Clause 11 defines the powers of management possessed by the karnavans or managers generally.

Clauses 12 and 13 make the karnavans accountable to the members of the tarwad. It is the generally accepted notion that they are not accountable except in a karnavasthanam suit—a suit to remove the karnavan—that is until after the whole property is ruined. The annals of litigation in Malabar will show that these clauses are necessary and the provision making karnavans accountable to the family will have a salutary effect on their conduct and it recognises only one of the primary principles of natural justice that a man looking after property in which others are also interested should be accountable to them.

Clauses 14 and 15 enable the karnavan to appropriate for himself a portion of the family income. A provision to this effect is necessary to promote healthy management. The management of a karnavan is very rarely altruistic and a commission that he earns honestly would it is hoped keep him from dishonestly enriching himself.

Clauses 16, 17 and 18 deal with alienations or debts that are to be regarded as binding on the tarwad and are of primary importance to prevent waste on the part of the karnavan.

These clauses 11 to 18 follow closely the Travancore Nayar Regulation which governs the Marumakkattayam Hindus of Travancore.

Clause 19 declares the right of maintenance of members of a tarwad and seeks to bestow legislative recognition on the principle enunciated in the case reported in I.L.R., 36 Madras, 203.

Clause 20 deals about renunciation and is only a recognition of the law as laid down in the Full Bench case reported in I.L.R., 28 Madras, 182.

Clause 21 deals with inheritance of the self-acquisitions of a member of an impartible tarwad. Half the property goes to the family and the other half goes to the wife and children. When marriages are recognized as valid, rights of inheritance necessarily follow and though such inheritance ought to be of the whole property, looking to the fact of the acquirer being a member of an impartible tarwad, it is thought desirable to leave to the tarwad one half in satisfaction of its fancied claims on the acquirer.

Clauses 22 to 25 deal with partition among tarwads that have not chosen to make themselves impartible. Clauses 6 to 10 and 22 to 25 will show that as a matter of fact the Bill leaves the option to partition or not to partition in the hands of the people themselves.

Clauses 26 and 27 are practically the same as clauses 11 and 12 of the cognate Bill and provide for the inheritance of properties after partition. The wife and children take the properties undisposed of. The tarwad from which a member has divided, or membership of which he has renounced, has no further claims on such member and his own immediate heirs, viz., his wife and children can alone with any show of reason claim his property.

Clause 28 provides for maintenance of one's wife and children and is based on section 17 of Act IV of 1896. It is practically the same as clause 13 of the cognate Bill.

Clause 29 deals with guardianship and is almost the same as section 18 of Act IV of 1896. It is the same as clause 14 of the cognate Bill.
